

Dear FCC,

I just recently read how FCC is try to propose a plan to have all radio stations provide air time to a group of people that would represented the majority & diversity of a population in a given area. : ? That was a mouthful. Why would the FCC feel the need to do this?

Collect the right people that would represent the majority & diversity of any population seems like an overwhelming job. There are a whole bunch of races (only one that is not direct results of a personal choice), there are whole bunch beliefs, there are a whole bunch of workers, there are a whole bunch of prejudices, there are whole bunch tolerances, and there are a whole bunch of other things that makes-up the population of the US today. Those other things include: restaurants, clothing stores, cable channels, radio stations, schools, automobiles, and so on and so on! : )

Funny, but FCC appears to proposing a plan that would almost seem to provide the same humor if it was applied to other things. For example: Red Lobster being commanded to have a dollar-menu like McDonalds and Lane Bryant being forced to carry the same line of clothing as the 1-2-3 or 2-3-4 store. Let us also consider the following example: TV Land Network being in jeopardy of litigations for airing the same shows as HBO, Cinemax, or those shows one would have to pay before viewing. What about if a child would be forced to attend a school in NC even though the parents have moved to CA or have chosen to homeschool the child? Even think about this, if Honda was obligated by law to use the same engine of Yugo? Ohhh just thought of this one, KKK group be forced by law to have a BLACK PANTHERS as a regular guest speaker. Kind of funny? : }

Well, I must get ready to retire for the evening, but I hope the point I was attempting to present was clear: one of the reasons we as the US population are so admired by other populations of the world is because of our freedom of choice. I like when objects are labeled, this should ensure the consumers of the contents that are inside and there providing the consumer with the information needed to make an informed decision on whether to purchase the item or not! So with all of the above and many other examples as well as with radio stations, the label should ensures the contents and the contents should not be tampered with for the satisfaction of the consumer that choose to select that particular radio station.
